the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1998. The public sector has also become an important employer of people with disabilities, with 1.5 million people with disabilities employed in the public sector in 1998, compared with 1.2 million in 1980.

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has become an important employer of people with disabilities. One reason is that the public sector has a long history of employing people with disabilities. In the 19th century, the public sector employed people with disabilities in a number of different roles, including as clerks, typists, and stenographers.

Another reason why the public sector has become an important employer of people with disabilities is that the public sector has a number of different departments and agencies, each of which has its own specific needs. This means that the public sector can employ people with disabilities in a wide range of different roles, including as clerks, typists, stenographers, and in a number of different technical and professional roles.

A third reason why the public sector has become an important employer of people with disabilities is that the public sector has a number of different policies and procedures in place to support people with disabilities. These policies and procedures are designed to ensure that people with disabilities are able to work in the public sector on an equal basis with people without disabilities.

There are a number of different policies and procedures in place to support people with disabilities in the public sector. These include policies and procedures relating to recruitment, selection, and promotion, as well as policies and procedures relating to training and development, and to the provision of reasonable adjustments.

One of the most important policies in place to support people with disabilities in the public sector is the policy relating to recruitment and selection. This policy ensures that people with disabilities are able to compete for jobs in the public sector on an equal basis with people without disabilities.

Another important policy in place to support people with disabilities in the public sector is the policy relating to training and development. This policy ensures that people with disabilities are able to access the same training and development opportunities as people without disabilities.

There are a number of different ways in which the public sector can support people with disabilities. One way is to provide reasonable adjustments to the workplace. This can include things like providing a wheelchair, or providing a sign language interpreter.

Another way in which the public sector can support people with disabilities is by providing training and development opportunities. This can include things like providing courses in the use of assistive technology, or providing courses in the use of sign language.
